Abigail DeVille has taken over Recess's Red Hook outpost.

Sara Roffino

Abigail DeVille has taken over Recess's Red Hook outpost for a two-month residency employing her signature style of combined bricolage, painting, and sculpture. The culmination is a "selective history of culturally invisible classes of people" and a reflection on our materially-obsessed culture. It's been a big year for DeVille: She was one of only four New York artists to participate in the New Museum's 2012 Triennial and she stole the show at the Dependent Art Fair in March. DeVille's work is deeply political, culturally relevant and an overall immersive and thought provoking experience.
